Mr. Biddle, of Penn, then rose and addressed the Committee in opposition to the bill.
He presented in a striking and most effective manner, the great objections to this measure—dwelling upon them with the force and carnestness which so pecularily distinguished his elecution, and illustrating them with singular copicusness and power.

In the House, Mr. Sorgeant moved to refer the flankrupt bill from the Senate, but the House refused to suspend the rules—Yeas 88, Nays 88—not two thirds. So the bill has no chance of passing. It is underatood that the Administration members are
